Latest Development in APPLE vs SAMSUNG dispute

One of the long lasting legal disputes between Apple and Samsung Electronics has entered a new chapter as Apple has once and for all claimed victory over Samsung in U.S Supreme court where US Court refused Samsung's plea for ruling requiring a payment of 120 million US dollar from Samsung to Apple.

The case started almost 6 years back (April 2011), when both Apple's slide to unlock patent and its quick links patent which provides software that automatically turned information like phone number into a tappable link got infringed by Samsung.

The controversial ruling by a Lower Court was about the South Korean payment of approximately 120 million dollars to Apple. The sum was awarded to the iPhone manufactures as Samsung has infringed several patents of Apple. Samsung appealed to the US Supreme Court in this regard, however it was rejected.

In California litigation, Apple received a payment of more than 900 million dollar.

Samsung was not pleased with this remarkable judgment and a Samsung spokesperson said in a statement that "Our argument was supported by many who believed that the Court should hear the case to reinstate fair standards that promote innovation and prevent abuse of the patent system".

Though only one case is ended, this gave Apple more than a 1 billion win against Samsung.
